The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) establishes federal minimum wage, overtime pay, recordkeeping, and child labor standards for employees in the private sector and in federal, state, and local governments. The Wage and Hour Division (WHD) of the U.S. Department of Labor administers and enforces the FLSA. The FLSA requires covered nonexempt employees to be paid at least the federal minimum wage and overtime pay of 1.5 times their regular rate of pay for all hours worked over 40 in a workweek. There are some exemptions from the minimum wage and/or overtime pay provisions. Employers are required to keep records of employees' wages, hours, and other conditions of employment. The FLSA sets minimum age requirements for employment and restricts the hours that youth under 18 can work. There are different rules for agricultural and non-agricultural employment. The WHD conducts investigations and gathers data to determine employer compliance. Violations may result in the employer being required to pay back wages, liquidated damages, and civil money penalties. Willful or repeated violations may carry criminal penalties. Employees can file lawsuits on their own behalf for back wages and damages. The FLSA prohibits employers from retaliating against employees who file complaints or provide information to the WHD. The WHD enforces other labor laws like the Davis-Bacon Act, Service Contract Act, Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act, Family and Medical Leave Act, and immigration-related worker protections. The Small Business Regulatory Enforcement Fairness Act established an ombudsman for small business regulatory issues. Small entities can submit comments about WHD enforcement actions. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission enforces the FLSA's equal pay provisions which prohibit gender-based wage discrimination.
